Student Learning Outcomes

Upon completion of this program, the student will be able to:

- articulate and apply the core principles of the sociological perspective to the study of social institutions and everyday life.
- assess, analyze, and apply sociological theories and social research methods.
- examine and develop an understanding of the social construction of reality and social categories.
- evaluate the processes of social inequality, stratification and agency through a social justice lens.

Career Information

Sociologists with graduate degrees may teach at the high school, college, and graduate levels. Research sociologists may manage and execute research at the local, state, and federal levels and in both private and public sector industry. Additional careers facilitated by advanced study of sociology include public policy analysis, jurisprudence, and careers in international fields. Applied sociologists work with social service agencies and community programs developing resources for various populations, i.e. at-risk-youth, the elderly or people experiencing challenges related to poverty, substance abuse, or the justice system. Sociology majors are encouraged to participate in community activities and community service internships and often attend relevant guest lectures and public events.

Associate Degrees

A.A. in Community Studies

Community Studies is an applied sociology program that provides a foundation for students to explore the social services, community development practices, and social justice efforts to address social inequities. Sociological theory and research principles will guide critical academic exploration and development, which will be applied to a hands on practicum field experience under the supervision of faculty and professionals in the community. The A.A. degree and certificate in Community Studies will offer additional broader employment options and career advancement opportunities.

Topics covered include street crimes, corporate crimes, white-collar crimes, domestic violence, drugs and alcohol abuse, lifestyle crimes, prison systems, capital punishment, rehabilitation, and the trend towards privatization of prisons. Field trips may be required. Credit may be earned for ADMJ 349 or SOC 318 but not for both.

Student Learning Outcomes

Upon completion of this course, the student will be able to:

- articulate and apply core sociological perspectives to crime, deviance, and social control.
- assess, analyze, and apply sociological and criminological theories of crime and deviance.
- understand the social construction of crime, deviance, and social categories of offenses.
- evaluate and assess how social stratification can impact experiences within the criminal justice system and our ability to shape them.

SOC 319 Sociology of Law and Justice

This course introduces various perspectives on the formation and use of law as an organizing principle of society as well as how societal forces can, in turn, influence the law. Special attention will be focused on unequal access to, uses of, and outcomes from the law and its various agencies. Topics covered include the historical perspectives of law as an institution and its processes, the enabling and constraining role of law in social movements, punishment, environmental law, torts, constitutional law, and the Patriot Act.

Student Learning Outcomes

Upon completion of this course, the student will be able to:

- articulate and apply the various sociological perspectives to the study of law and justice.
- apply the comparative/historical approach to assess the role that societal influences can play in the implementation and punishment of legal codes.
- critically analyze the disparate impact and experiences within the legal system of various demographic populations.
- compare, contrast, and evaluate the American legal system with an international alternative.
- explain how changing cultural norms, politics, and technological innovations can lead to changes in the law.

SOC 321 Race, Ethnicity and Inequality in the United States

This course examines patterns of ethnic relations. The course emphasis is domestic but includes investigations of global concerns. Topics include discrimination, prejudice, social stratification, inequality, racism, sexism, ageism, homophobia, and related subjects.

Student Learning Outcomes

Upon completion of this course, the student will be able to:

- apply and critique sociological research and theories of racism, privilege, and intersectionality as a means of maintaining domination and oppression.
- evaluate how social processes shaped the experiences of various underrepresented groups in the United States.
- identify the historic and contemporary causes of prejudice and discrimination in the United States and assess the outcomes.
- identify the social dynamics that lead to conflict, cooperation, and social change among groups in the US.

SOC 335 Sociology of Aging

This course introduces various sociological perspectives regarding issues of crime, deviance, and social control. Particular attention is paid to the analysis of how laws and cultural norms shape the definition and meaning of crime and deviance. Topics covered include street crimes, corporate crimes, white-collar crimes, domestic violence, drugs and alcohol abuse, lifestyle crimes, prison systems, capital punishment, rehabilitation, and the trend towards privatization of prisons. Field trips may be required. Credit may be earned for ADMJ 349 or SOC 318 but not for both.

- identify special concerns of ethnic minorities and older women.
- describe the process of dealing with death and bereavement- physically, cognitively, and emotionally.
- cite biological theories regarding physiological changes with age.

SOC 341 Sex and Gender in the U.S.

This course focuses on gender relations in American society. It examines historical, social, economic, political, and cultural forces in shaping gender identity and gender roles. The goal of the course is to utilize sociological theories to explain gender experience as socially constructed rather than biologically determined. Specifically, the course examines the experience of people of diverse economic, racial, and ethnic origins within a historical and cross-cultural perspective.

Student Learning Outcomes

Upon completion of this course, the student will be able to:

- articulate and apply the core principles of sociology to the study of sex and gender.
- assess, analyze, and apply sociological (and social science) theories and social research methods (including comparative/historical) to the study of gender and sex.
- examine the social and historical construction of sex and gender and its influence on individual and collective behavior.
- evaluate the role of various institutions in creating and perpetuating social inequality and stratification of sex and gender inequality.

SOC 343 Women and Social Action

This course provides an overview of the ways in which women engage in deliberative social action to change the conditions of their lives and of their communities. The work of various social activists, past and present, will be analyzed in the context of sociological theory as applied to issues related to the institutions of family, health, religion, employment, sexual harassment, housing, and interpersonal violence.

Student Learning Outcomes

Upon completion of this course, the student will be able to:

- identify the ways in which social change may be formulated, strategized, and initiated.
- describe how gender inequalities intersect with other systems of inequality, such as age, class, disability, ethnicity, race, religion, and sexual orientation.
- compare the issues around which women from different social backgrounds organize and mobilize.
- compare the strengths and challenges of a variety of leadership styles.
- examine social issues and social change efforts using a feminist perspective.
- evaluate the impact of structural and policy changes as they affect the lives of women and communities.
SOC 344 Sociology of Women's Health

This course provides a sociological analysis of health issues that concern women throughout their lives. The impact of physiology, psychology, culture, society, and politics upon women's well-being will be addressed using the feminist perspective.

Upon completion of this course, the student will be able to:

- articulate sociological and feminist perspectives and research methods in the study of women's health.
- identify and analyze key issues affecting women's health and reproductive health through transnational perspectives.
- demonstrate knowledge about the strategies employed by women throughout the world to resist gender oppression and to organize and reshape their communities.

SOC 345 Global Women's Issues

The course will consider the conditions of women's lives from the perspectives of global and transnational feminism, examining issues such as immigration, girls' education, maternal health, globalization, economics, war and conflict, gender-based violence, and political activism. Students will seek to understand women's lives by connecting global data about the status of women to material consequences for individual women and local communities. Using gender as a theoretical category of analysis, the course will explore how gender inequality and oppression create disproportionate suffering and lack of opportunities for women and girls. Students will learn to ask critical questions about the complex and intersecting aspects of the oppression of women, as well as develop an understanding of the culturally situated, creative, and heroic ways women are standing up to gender oppression and shaping change within their local communities and nations. Credit may be awarded for either WGS 302 or SOC 345 but not for both.

Upon completion of this course, the student will be able to:

- analyze key issues affecting women through a transnational feminist perspective, including immigration, education, maternal health, globalization, economics, war and conflict, gender-based violence, and political activism.
- comprehend the value of locally-generated social change arising from and working within the culture of local communities.
- demonstrate knowledge about the ways that women throughout the world are resisting gender oppression and organizing to reshape their own communities.
- critically assess media representation to seek an understanding of historical and cultural complexities that are embedded in global women’s issues.
- recognize key women activists who have received global recognition for their contributions.
- apply knowledge as an emerging global citizen by considering options for contributing to positive change.

SOC 347 Women, Globalization, and Human Rights

Through global and transnational feminist perspectives, this course provides an overview of human rights ideas and frameworks, including the history and ongoing implementation of United Nations conventions, treaties, and campaigns concerning women. The course will consider the complex and gendered social, economic, and political impacts of globalization on women and girls around the world. Students will learn to critically engage with theories, approaches, and representation related to improving the lives of women in the global context and will learn about key human rights defenders who are recognized for their activism. Students will consider their own place in a globalized world and utilize course knowledge to think about their role in creating justice in the world. Credit may be awarded for either WGS 304 or SOC 347 but not for both.

Upon completion of this course, the student will be able to:

- describe human rights ideas and frameworks, including the history and implementation of United Nations conventions and treaties concerning women.
analyze the complex and gendered social, economic, and political aspects of globalization that disproportionately disadvantage and impact women in various locations around the world.

identify various feminist and social science theories and approaches to improving the lives of women globally, including human rights, global and transnational feminisms, gender in development, grassroots organizing, and global campaigns.

critically assess discourses related to women in the global context, including images and messages in the media, approaches and representations utilized by nongovernmental organizations, and language and methods within the United Nations human rights domain.

recognize key women’s human rights defenders who have made important contribution to furthering the rights of women and girls.

identify options, as a globally-oriented citizen, for involvement in positive social change.

This course examines human behavior as it is affected by social forces. Concepts such as culture, social institutions, social stratification, social change, and social control will be analyzed from both a micro and macro-sociological perspective. This course is designed for students from all academic disciplines interested in an honors experience who are motivated to learn the sociological perspective and how it can be applied to all aspects of the human experience. The class is structured as a seminar in which students will be responsible for developing qualitative and/or quantitative analyses of controversial issues while drawing on classical and contemporary sociological theory to frame classroom activities. Students will utilize primary sources from sociological works and examine the texts and research via oral and written assignments, as well as with experiential activities and presentations. Credit may be earned for SOC 480 or SOC 300, but not both.

Student Learning Outcomes
Upon completion of this course, the student will be able to:

- articulate and apply the core principles of the sociological perspective to the study of social institutions and everyday life.
- assess, analyze, and apply sociological theories and social research methods.
- examine and develop an understanding of the social construction of reality and social categories.
- evaluate the processes of social inequality, stratification, and agency through a social justice lens.

SOC 481 Social Problems - Honors

This course examines contemporary social problems at the global, national, regional, and local level from a sociological perspective. Students will explore the social causes and consequences of problems and interventions, analyze the role of power and ideology, and evaluate proposed solutions. This honors section uses an intensive seminar style of instructional methodology with extensive research projects on social problems designed to challenge motivated students. This course is not open to students who have completed SOC 301.

Student Learning Outcomes

Upon completion of this course, the student will be able to:

- articulate and apply the core principles of the sociological perspective to the study of social problems.
- apply sociological theories and social research methods (including comparative/historical) to assess and analyze domestic and global problems as social processes.
- assess how public policies and unequal social conditions affect individual and community experiences as well as how individual and community actions contribute to the continuation and/or change of those policies and conditions.

SOC 482 Race, Ethnicity and Inequality in the United States - Honors

This course examines patterns of ethnic relations. The course emphasis is domestic but includes investigations of global concerns. Topics include discrimination, prejudice, social stratification, inequality, racism, sexism, ageism, homophobia, and related subjects. This honors section uses an intensive seminar style of instructional methodology with extensive research projects on race and ethnicity designed to challenge motivated students. This course is not open to students who have completed SOC 301.

Student Learning Outcomes

Upon completion of this course, the student will be able to:

- apply and critique sociological research and theories of racism, privilege, and intersectionality as a means of maintaining domination and oppression.
- evaluate how social processes have shaped the experiences of various underrepresented groups in the United States.
- identify the historic and contemporary causes of prejudice and discrimination in the United States and assess the outcomes.
- identify the social dynamics that lead to conflict, cooperation, and social change among groups in the US.

SOC 494 Topics in Sociology

This course provides an examination of specific topics from a sociological perspective. The particular subject to be covered each semester will be determined by the Sociology Department and depend on topical events. Students may earn from 0.5-4 units. Consult the schedule of classes for specific topics. UC transfer credit will be awarded only after the course has been evaluated by enrolling at the UC campus. The units completed for this course cannot be counted towards the minimum 60 units required for admissions.

Student Learning Outcomes

Upon completion of this course, the student will be able to:
- analyze contemporary social issues utilizing the sociological perspective.
- demonstrate an understanding of and be able to critique the relationship between individual experience and social forces.
- critically apply sociological concepts to everyday life.
- evaluate the writings of sociologists, as well as those who write for the popular press.
